LESS DISCONTENT IN IRELAND.

"As for the feeling in Ireland, I found that the people are more content there than they have been for many years. The Queen's visit accomplished a wondrous amount of good. There will be no open dissatisfaction among the Irish for a long time to come, at least, not on the old political grounds.
"During my journey I found a complete refutation of the saying that Shakspeare puts into Anthony's mouth: "The evil that men do lives after them, but the good is oft interred with their bones." I will simply give you two illustrations of the fact that it is oft the good that men do lives after them. In Swansea, in Wales, I preached the 111th anniversary sermon in the Countess of Huntington's Church. The Countess established this church in 1789, and died two years later. But still this church, and many others that she founded, selling her jewels in some instances to provide the necessary funds, are doing a grand and noble work, reaching out to the masses and calling thousands into the Great Fold. Again, I preached in John Wesley's Church in London. Wesley himself lay in his grave just beside the church walls. His grandson played the organ. This church is the mother of the Wesleyan Churches in England, and is the greatest religious power in England next to the Established Church. These churches are all doing a great service to humanity, and a most potential influence in Christ's cause—showing that the good that John Wesley did is not interred with his bones, but lives after him.

"That line of Shakespeare's is pessi-walls." Now nessymps doesn't next.

Interred with his bones, but lives after him.

"That line of Shakespeare's is pessimistic. Now pessimism doesn't pay. The pessimist is himself most likely to decay young, to die early. The man who is always decrying things, pulling things down, asserting that the world is going to the dogs, is usually himself the first to fall. He pulls things down upon his own head and perishes amid his own pessimism. The man who thinks pure thoughts, lives a good life, acts as his conscience and not as his pocket dictates, lives the healthiest life and lives the longest." is going to the dogs, is usually himself the first to fall. He pulls things down upon his own head and perishes amid his own pessimism. The man who thinks pure thoughts, lives a good life, acts as his conscience and not as his pocket dictates, lives the healthiest life and lives the longest."

GLAD TO GET HOME.

"Were you not entertained in several countries by royalty?" the Doctor was asked.

"Yes," he replied. "But I prefer not to talk on that topic. My meeting with some of the rulers of this world was in every way and delicated.

some of the rulers of this world was in every way delightful, but I was received as a private individual."

When asked his plans for the immediate future, Dr. Talmage said: "My whole time will be given to my editorial work in connection with the Christian Herald, although on Sunday I shall fill pulpit engagements in Washington, Chicago, Cincinnati, Boston, Philadelphia, Canada and the South.

South. "Above all the emotion that dominates my heart is one of thanksgiving that I am home again. Every man who lives under the American flag ought to go on his knees every morning and thank God that his home is here, and that he lives under a republican rather than a monarchical form of government."

ernment."
Dr. Talmage returned to his home, in Washington, Thursday night.

WILHELMINA'S PROPOSAL.

(Atlanta Constitution.)

The story of Wilhelmina's love making shows that a woman can break ties as quickly as a man.

It is related that when the young Queen first met Duke Henry he was in bonds to another, and hence he was indifferent to fresh conquests. The Queen resented his unimpressionability, and proceeded to bring the young man to his senses. He was invited to the royal palace, and there, with no means of escape, he was forced to listen to the demand of the Queen that he should become her other self, He pleaded for release, but to no purpose. He evenly resorted to the maidenly request for a month's time in which "to get used to the thought," but it was now or never with the buxom young woman who sits upon the Dutch throne, Finally, when his head dropped in a faint, it was taken by Her Majesty as a surrender, and she supported him tenderly until he got over the shock.

(Showing her wonderful improvement!) clear my skin; my face was in a horrible condition, literally covered with red sonds, in a horrible condition, literally covered with red sonds, in a horrible condition, literally covered with red sonds, in a horrible condition, literally covered with red sand freekles. And whenever the weather condition, literally covered with red sand freekles. And whenever the weather changed aczema, chap and said rhenum added to my misery. I suffered a thousand reduction, literally covered with red said freekles. And whenever the weather changed takeheads, meth patches and freekles. And whenever the weather changed takeheads, meth patches and freekles. And whenever the weather changed takeheads, meth patches and freekles. And whenever the weather changed takeheads, meth patches and freekles. And whenever the weather changed ezzema, chap and said reckles. And whenever the weather changed ezzema, chap and said released to my surprise when the next day all reduces and sore-new said freen and there is not a blemish of which was a laterally covered wit

(Boston Post.)

It will be seen, by those who read in Republican papers Wednesday morning the report of Governor Roosevelt's speech at St. Louis Tuesday night, that it was a great popular success; that theers and applause and laughter and friendly shouts punctuated every paragraph in its delivery; that the Rough Rider candidate aroused his audience
